In New York, students are suspended from schools in response to a wide range of behaviors, including minor infractions like being late to class and dress code violations. This form of punishment begins as early as Pre-Kindergarten. The overreliance on exclusionary discipline continues despite research that indicates suspensions are ineffective and harmful and that they deepen academic inequities, especially for students of color, those from low-income backgrounds, and students with disabilities.

Some of the short- and long-term impacts of suspension on a child include:

- Lower math and reading scores
- Decreased school trust and identification with school
- Increased risk of drop out and criminal justice system involvement

Solutions Not Suspensions

S.134/A.118

The students in your district deserve policies that allow them to thrive in a supportive educational environment focused on accountability, healing relationships, and repairing harm. The Solutions Not Suspensions bill would:

1. Require school codes of conduct to include restorative approaches to discipline and proactively foster a positive school climate
2. Limit the use of suspensions in Pre-Kindergarten through 3rd grade to only the most serious behaviors
3. Shorten the maximum length of suspension from 180 to 20 school days (except when required by federal law)
4. Prohibit suspensions for minor infractions such as tardiness, dress code violations, or insubordination
5. Require that students who are suspended receive academic instruction and the opportunity to complete assignments, take exams, and earn credit
6. Require charter schools to follow state education law on student behavior and discipline
